

Attention

A major bridge over the Brazeau River has washed out near the southeastern tip of Brazeau Lake.

This river is impassable during times of high water. In lower-flow conditions, it could be a dangerous ford. Adjust hiking plans accordingly.

For most of the 2023 hiking season, travel on Trail #132 between John-John Creek Campground (#22) and Brazeau Lake Campground (#21) or Brazeau River Campground (#19) will not be possible. From Nigel trailhead, users can reach Brazeau River and Brazeau Lake Campgrounds by using Trail #130 but will not likely be able to complete the Brazeau Loop.

Please check the trail report for updates.

Is this trail for you?

The Brazeau Loop is a demanding high-elevation trail that crosses three mountain passes. River fords will be necessary. Sudden weather changes are common. Efforts on this longer-distance wilderness hike come with many rewards. Strong hikers can complete the loop in five days. The passes may be snow covered until July; travel is not recommended earlier in the season.

The details

Most people will hike this lollipop-shaped trail counter-clockwise, since the elevation gain is more gradual. A typical trip is to travel from Nigel Creek trailhead over Nigel Pass and spend the first night at Four Point Campground (#16, 13.9 km). Next is to Brazeau Lake Campground (#21, 18.1km), then over Poboktan Pass to Jonas Cutoff Campground (#23, 16.2 km). The Jonas Shoulder trail loops back to Four Point Campground (#16, 18.9 km). On the last day, return to the Nigel Creek trailhead.

Both Jonas Cutoff and Brazeau Lake Campgrounds are good base camps for day trips.

Experienced hikers may use the Nigel Pass trail as a starting point to explore the White Goat Wilderness Area. An unmarked, unmaintained route through Cataract Pass begins from this trail. Topographical maps, good route finding skills, and the ability to navigate water crossings are a must in White Goat.
